Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance of the property. Explain contributing and noncontributing resources if necessary. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, setting, size, and significant features.)

Summary Paragraph

Ponce de Leon Court, located a few blocks east of the downtown Decatur courthouse square, is a short residential street containing 26 lots terminating in a cul-de-sac. The original development plan included this cul-de-sac as a way to direct traffic around a circular planter. Lots are deep and narrow, except for the developer's property at the end of the street, which contains a large two-story house built in 1921 by John and Margaret Womack. This house was converted into apartments in 1958. Most lots have modest single-family homes dating from the 1920s, but there are also a few duplexes and three small apartment buildings in the district. The street maintains a unified character through similar setbacks, subtropical vegetation, sidewalks with planter strips on both sides, and houses that are generally the same scale. A few surviving palm trees and bamboo also distinguish this street from others in the area. House types include bungalows and side-gabled cottages. Stylistic influences are primarily Craftsman and Colonial Revival. Some houses have enclosed front porches, but overall the district has a high degree of integrity. The district also includes three buildings at the beginning of the street, facing East Ponce de Leon Avenue, a major east-west street through Decatur. One is a 1922 two-story brick apartment building with classical features typical of many built in the greater Atlanta metropolitan area at that time.

Narrative Description

Note: Amanda Pellerin wrote most of the following section in July 2009 as part of the "Historic District Information Form" for the Ponce de Leon Court Historic District (on file at the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Historic Preservation Division). Georgia Historic Preservation Division staff edited the description for inclusion in this nomination.

The city of Decatur displays the terrain characteristics of the Piedmont geographic region with rolling hills and ridgelines. Ponce de Leon Court is a small residential street that runs downgrade from the ridge of a major traffic artery (East Ponce de Leon Avenue) towards the terminus of a cul-de-sac. The lower elevation at the end of the street creates a shelter from wind and extreme frosts, which is one theory for the ability of some mature palm trees to survive in the district.

The Ponce de Leon Court Historic District is located just outside of the commercial area of downtown Decatur (shown in background of photograph 11). To the west, three blocks away, is the historic (1918) courthouse, which marks the center of town and is surrounded by historic commercial buildings and a newer courthouse. Decatur went through major transitions in the mid-20th century to incorporate more contemporary buildings and attract new business. Low to mid-rise office buildings and condominium towers, as well as retail shopping centers, were realized as part of this redevelopment strategy and new land use plan. The Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority (MARTA) also built a heavy rail station next to the courthouse square in the 1970s.

To the east of Ponce de Leon Court, the area is predominately residential. The Glenwood Elementary School, established in 1913, lies to the immediate east. There are nearby pocket neighborhoods that display similar characteristics distinctive to early automobile neighborhoods of the 1920s. Ponce de Leon Court stands out among similar neighborhoods for the remarkable number of intact historic buildings in such a concentrated area. The subtropical flora mixed with native vegetation also distinguishes this street from the adjacent residential areas. To the north of Ponce de Leon Court, the large National Register-listed Decatur cemetery borders the property, providing a development buffer on this edge.

County and State

Ponce de Leon Court is a single, 750-foot-long street extending north from East Ponce de Leon Avenue. The district is comprised entirely of houses in similar styles with distinct individual details on each residence. Single-family dwellings and duplexes make up the majority of the district, but it also includes three multi-family buildings. The houses and apartment buildings are generally placed close to the street giving shallow front-yard setbacks and large backyards. The side-yards are narrow but uniform along the street.

The original layout of the area (once also known as Palm Court or the M. H. Womack Property Subdivision) consisted of 27 narrow, deep lots facing Ponce de Leon Court and an additional 12 shallower lots facing Barry Street (present-day Commerce Drive). All 39 lots were planned in rectilinear shapes. This configuration of the lots within the district has largely been preserved with the exception of three properties (136, 140, and 144) on the west side of Ponce de Leon Court that appropriated the shallow lots facing Commerce Drive, and the irregular lot lines at the apex of the cul-de-sac. The separate lots facing Commerce have not been developed, and are not in the district. The cul-de-sac was a defining feature of the original development plan. It centers on a circular planter that flows auto traffic around it (photographs 1, 2, and 14). On both sides of the street a concrete sidewalk with a planter strip separates the auto traffic and pedestrian walk paths (photograph 8).

LANDSCAPE CHARACTERISTICS

The district's landscape of bamboo and small palm trees distinguishes Ponce de Leon Court from other neighborhoods in Decatur. The palm trees were planted by John L. Womack, contract builder, proprietor of the Fulton Lime and Cement Company, and developer of the houses along Ponce de Leon Court. Womack constructed the house at 205 Ponce de Leon Court in 1921 as his own residence. He turned his front yard into a semi-tropical oasis inspired by the foliage and banana groves he saw while traveling in southern coastal cities like Mobile, Miami and Charleston. The planter in the cul-de-sac originally boasted a banana grove that produced fruit because of Womack's diligence to cultivating the plants including storing the root balls in his basement every winter. Today, the cul-de-sac planter has a Chinese fir tree that still refers to the tropical intent of the landscape (photograph 15). The palm trees that grow in the front yards of houses surrounding the cul-de-sac are thought to be the northern-most growing specimens and have been studied by professional botanists to understand their hardiness (photograph 13).

Mixed into the tropical vegetation are native plants that become more predominant towards the intersection of the street with East Ponce de Leon Avenue (photograph 22). Streetscapes include sidewalks lined with flowering crape myrtle trees. As the street descends into the cul-de-sac there is a brief interlude of woods and bamboo that separates the Womack subdivision from the Decatur Cemetery.

The street was made for a combination of auto and pedestrian traffic, as seen in the width of the street, easily maneuvered cul-de-sac turn-around, and generously allotted sidewalks. Decatur once had a network of streetcar tracks, one of which ran along East Ponce de Leon Avenue with the intersection of Ponce de Leon Court being one of the last stops (photograph 9). As in most urban areas, the streetcars were abandoned with the increased popularity of the automobile and bus as primary methods for transportation.

SINGLE-FAMILY HOUSES AND DUPLEXES

One-story single-family dwellings and a couple of duplexes make up the majority of the district. The most common house type is the bungalow, followed by the side-gabled cottage. In this neighborhood, almost all have brick exterior walls and foundations and chimneys. Porches are usually placed off-center on the front or to the side. Detached garages are fairly common and tend to be to the rear of the property. Architectural details on the houses include elements of Craftsman or Colonial Revival styles, or a combination of eclectic stylistic qualities. Below is the list of addresses with their date of construction and a brief description of their architectural types and styles, as categorized in the 1991 context Georgia's Living Places: Historic Houses in Their Landscaped Settings.

MULTI-FAMILY DWELLINGS

There are three multi-family dwellings in the district, all two-stories in height. The following is a brief description of each.

430 East Ponce de Leon Avenue (photograph 10)

Built in 1922, this two-story brick apartment building with basement and attic is typical of many Atlanta-area apartments constructed between 1910 and World War II. It is defined by several classical elements, such as a symmetrical façade, two-story porches, and stone quoins on the corners. It has a simple roof entablature, a front entry with a fanlight window over the doors, and fluted columns.

Applicable National Register Criteria

(Mark "x" in one or more boxes for the criteria qualifying the property for National Register listing.)

- A Property is associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history.
- B Property is associated with the lives of persons significant in our past.
- C Property embodies the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or represents the work of a master, or possesses high artistic values, or represents a significant and distinguishable entity whose components lack individual distinction.
- D Property has yielded, or is likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

Criteria Considerations

(Mark "x" in all the boxes that apply.)

Property is:

- A Owned by a religious institution or used for religious purposes.
- B removed from its original location.
- C a birthplace or grave.
- D a cemetery.
- E a reconstructed building, object, or structure.
- F a commemorative property.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance and applicable criteria.)

The Ponce de Leon Court Historic District is significant at the local level under Criteria A and C because it is a good and intact example of a small Decatur residential neighborhood that was primarily associated with one local developer. Ponce de Leon Court is a single street that was developed in the 1920s by John L. Womack (1887-1956). His wife's name (Margaret H. Womack) is listed on the subdivision plat, reportedly to insulate family assets from his various business ventures. The Womacks purchased the first tract in 1921, where they built their house at the end of the street. Subsequent tracts were purchased in 1922 and 1924. Subdivision plats for the street date from 1924, 1925, and 1926. John Womack was a small business owner, builder, developer, salesman, and amateur horticulturalist. Also known as "J.L.," Womack owned the Fulton Lime and Cement Company in Atlanta, one of several businesses he managed. The district is significant in the area of community planning and development as a planned automobile subdivision with a unique and distinguishable landscape. It is set apart from surrounding commercial development by its location on a small cul-de-sac. A few of the tropical or subtropical plant species favored by the developer are still apparent. The district is significant in the area of architecture for its good collection of residential types and styles, as identified in Georgia's Living Places: Historic Houses in Their Landscaped Settings, a statewide context. It includes representative examples of houses from the 1920s common in similar neighborhoods. Most of the residences are modest one-story bungalows and cottages built for the middle class. Architects are not known, and several may have been built by contractors using stock plans.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

The Ponce de Leon Court Historic District is significant in the area of architecture for its intact collection of historic residential types and styles, as identified in Georgia's Living Places: Historic Houses in Their Landscaped Settings, a statewide context. Included are good examples of early- to mid-20th-century house types and styles common in similar neighborhoods. Side-gabled cottages and bungalows are the predominant types. Most were built within a very short time frame from 1925 to 1926. The major stylistic influences are Colonial Revival and Craftsman. Brick is the most common exterior material, along with a couple of examples of wood siding. Many of the houses were historically modest dwellings, although several have had small additions or enclosed porches. One-story wood frame construction was typical. The only two-story dwellings are the former developer's house (now apartments) and two apartment buildings. While the architects are not known, developer J.L. Womack had a major role in the construction along the street. The houses in the district illustrate how popular styles and types of the period were used for smaller homes. Among the earliest houses are Craftsman bungalows dating to the 1920s. Some bungalows in the district exhibit only a few of the typical Craftsman features, or some have both Craftsman and classically inspired details. Colonial Revival details were very popular in the first half of the 20th century. These are represented throughout the district on various house types, including side-gabled cottages from the 1920s. The architecture of the street does maintain a certain continuity of scale and siting that reflects its initial creation by a single developer.

The district is also significant in the area of community planning and development as a planned subdivision that reflects the city of Decatur's residential growth in the years before the Great Depression. The streetcar lines through Decatur were giving way to automobiles as the primary mode of transportation. This middle-class development was associated with a single developer, John L. Womack, who designed it in the 1920s for easy access to downtown Decatur. Provisions were also made for aesthetic concerns such as landscaping, sidewalks, and a cul-de-sac terminus with a planter in the middle. The development also contained a mixture of native and subtropical vegetation (including small palm trees) that gave it a distinctive appearance that it still retains.

Ponce de Leon Court Historic District
Name of Property

County and State

Developmental history/additional historic context information (if appropriate)

Note: Amanda Pellerin wrote most of the following section in July 2009 as part of the "Historic District Information Form" for the Ponce de Leon Court Historic District (on file at the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, Historic Preservation Division). Georgia Historic Preservation Division staff edited the developmental history for inclusion in this nomination.

PRE-SUBDIVISION HISTORY (1823-1920)

The city of Decatur was established in 1823. When the Western and Atlantic Railroad came to the region looking to locate the terminus point of the line, Decatur reportedly rejected the railroad's offer. Marthasville, six miles west of Decatur, was renamed Atlanta in 1843 and became an important railroad hub. Decatur grew along with Atlanta. A map of Decatur from 1864 shows the street layout and some of the housing around the city during the time of the Civil War. Broad and Green streets (later named Ponce de Leon Avenue) are visible on the map as well as Barry Street (now Commerce Drive). Barry Street marked the edge of the city limits until the 1910s and development beyond this demarcation was more rural in character. The present day area of Ponce de Leon Court was pasture land in 1864 with two buildings or structures facing Broad Street and two facing Barry. A map of the area from 1879 shows more specifically the development in Decatur. Generally, there was not much construction within the center of town over the 15 years between the maps, but along the fringes of the city limits the pasture land began to be divided into large lots. Along Barry Street, and beyond it on Broad, more housing developed.

By the turn of the 20th century, Decatur continued to see growth and prosperity, with population increases partly due to businessmen commuting to nearby Atlanta and the establishment of educational institutions such as Agnes Scott Female Seminary. Prior to 1891, the Georgia Railroad was the only connection between Atlanta and Decatur besides horse-drawn buggy. In the spring of 1891, the Metropolitan Street Railroad Company extended a street railway service (initially non-electric) that ran from Pryor Street in Atlanta through Reynoldstown terminating in Decatur by the Agnes Scott campus. This line was known as the South Decatur Trolley. A few years later, the Atlanta City Street Railway Company secured a franchise to build a line from Atlanta to Decatur. It started in downtown Atlanta and circled the Decatur courthouse square. This electric streetcar line was listed on some maps as the Main Decatur Line and would serve the Ponce de Leon Court area until around 1948.

In 1900 the city of Decatur annexed additional land including the parcels of land that would become the Womack subdivision (Ponce de Leon Court). A 1901 city map displays the additional development and density within the newly expanded city limits. The land east of Barry Street and north of Broad Street where the district now lies is divided into two large tracts of land owned by E.S. Lathrop and Glen Esdale. The route of the two streetcar lines in Decatur are also visible on the map, showing how the Main Decatur Line runs past the Esdale and Lathrop properties. The 1915 DeKalb County Atlas provides another snapshot of the district. Land Lot Number 246 in the 15th tax district contains the area that would become Ponce de Leon Court. Again, the land is subdivided but into three distinct parcels owned by J.W. Pearce, Frank Lathrop and a Miss Laura Lathrop. The map also clearly denotes the streetcar track that runs along Ponce de Leon Avenue. The next ten years of development would change the large lots into an early auto subdivision that is the subject of this nomination.

WOMACK SUBDIVISION DEVELOPMENT (1921-1930)

As the automobile took over as the primary mode of transportation, the nature of housing began to change. Among the neighborhoods developed in Decatur according to the new layout of residential settings were Ponce de Leon Terrace, Ponce de Leon Heights, Chelsea Heights, Clairemont Park and Ponce de Leon Court. By the mid-1920s East Lake Drive, Ponce de Leon Avenue, and Howard Street constituted the three main automobile routes in Decatur .

In 1921 John (J.L.) and Margaret Womack purchased a tract of land bisected by a pig trail and built a large house in front of which he planted tropical plants. This two-story home with Neo-Classical Revival architectural details became the anchor of the Womack Subdivision developed a few years later. J.L. Womack experimented with growing banana plants, having employees dig up the root balls of the plant every winter and storing them in the basement of the house at 205 Ponce de Leon Court. The unique landscaping of this house would help differentiate the neighborhood from others around the city. Because of this immediately recognizable characteristic, the neighborhood was originally known as Palm Court.

The Womacks bought an additional parcel of land from J.W. Pearce in May of 1922 for $1,200. In March of 1924, the Womacks acquired three more parcels from Pearce for a total cost of $3,500. The plats of the subdivision date from 1924, 1925, and 1926. While the developer is listed as M.H. Womack on the plat maps, this person was J.L. Womack's wife, Margaret (Maggie) H. Womack. According to the family's oral history, the properties purchased by J.L. were routinely put into different family members' names to insulate his real estate from financial crisis.

According to family records, J.L. Womack personally oversaw the development of the street. Information is not conclusive as to whether individual properties were developed and sold to home buyers or whether there was simultaneous construction of most houses along the entire street. The DeKalb New Era credits J.L. with the construction of Ponce de Leon Court and the houses along the street. The local newspaper describes J.L. as a "public spirited citizen of whom Decatur may well feel pride. He is developing Ponce de Leon Court, having completed more than a half dozen modern dwellings and having several others under way" (The DeKalb New Era, July 22, 1926). J.L. may have used his contacts through his cement and lime company to hire contract workers to construct the houses. His grandson relates that he worked with an architect to design other buildings around the city and state, but the architect's name has been lost. The houses on Ponce de Leon Court are not believed to be a product of designs taken from published plan books, but an expression of popular house style trends adapted by J.L. and potentially his architect.

In the DeKalb real estate records office, deeds recorded in 1927 show the purchase of several of the properties within the district from individual property owners. In 1930 a notation was written on top of these deeds requiring that any future payment towards the mortgage of these properties should go to the Equitable Trust Bank. This suggests that the Womacks lost property to foreclosure during the Great Depression years.

The Sanborn Fire Insurance maps dating from 1924 and updated to 1941 show Ponce de Leon Court (developed sometime between 1921 and 1924) lined with single-story dwellings placed with uniform, shallow setbacks of 10 to 15 feet in narrow, deep lots. Compared with other neighborhoods in Decatur, houses on Ponce de Leon Court were much closer together. This is validated by nearby neighborhoods visible on the

Name of Property

DeKalb County, Georgia
County and State

same sheet of the Sanborn Fire Insurance maps. Despite notable differences, the neighborhood contained the standardizing features brought by the automobile age including private driveways for each house and detached auto garages located behind the main house. Even the apartment buildings on Ponce de Leon Court and East Ponce de Leon Avenue show garage outbuildings for renters. Mixed density housing has been a characteristic of this part of Decatur since its inception.

MID-20th CENTURY (1930-1960s)

Following the Great Depression and World War II, quality affordable housing was in high demand and short supply. Ponce de Leon Court filled a vital need for families seeking comfortable dwelling spaces at a reasonable price. The houses within the neighborhood were highly coveted for their location and stability. According to the oral account of John Womack III, the demographics of the home owners in the neighborhood were white, middle-class professionals: doctors, teachers, dentists, salesmen, nurses, business owners, and lawyers. The age group ranged from children to young professionals to retirees and widows. The proximity of the school made the neighborhood attractive to families and provided the Womack grandchildren with playmates. Young professionals could enjoy the quiet atmosphere of the street without compromising the closeness and convenience of in-town living including public transportation, which by the 1950s meant buses. John Womack III describes the neighborhood during the mid-20th century with typical images of Americana complete with popsicle stands run by neighborhood children and block parties with barbeque. The only major changes to the street came in the form of subdividing single family houses at 420 East Ponce de Leon Avenue and 105/107/109 and 205 Ponce de Leon Court into apartment units.

JOHN L. WOMACK (1887- 1956)

John L. Womack grew up on a farm in Newnan, Georgia, the eldest son. His grandson, John Womack III, relates that J.L. completed his education up to the fourth grade. At the age of 16 Womack's leg was amputated following an accident at a construction site where a building fell on and crushed his right leg. Womack was an astute and ambitious businessman. He owned dime stores in Kirkwood and Little Five Points in Atlanta. His experience with sewer, flue lining, and fire bricks brought him to pursue distribution connections with the Stevens, Inc. companies, the largest supplier in Atlanta and the surrounding area for clay and masonry products. Using this distribution line, J.L. ran a very successful business through the Fulton Lime and Cement at 521-531 Edgewood Avenue in Atlanta. The proceeds of this business more than likely funded the land acquisition and development venture on Ponce de Leon Court. John Womack III estimates that in 1929 his grandfather lost over one million dollars in property. Womack maintained friendships with city officials in Atlanta and Decatur. He designed and constructed several buildings in both cities.

J.L. Womack married Margret Holtzclaw. According to their grandson, they lived for a time within Joel Hurt's Inman Park subdivision in a Victorian house along Edgewood Avenue in Atlanta. The couple moved to Ponce de Leon Court and built the two-story house at 205 Ponce de Leon Court in 1921. J.L. particularly made an impact on the growth of Decatur during the 1920s. The DeKalb New Era recognized his development of Ponce de Leon Court and general "upbuilding of Decatur" through construction and business leadership. Womack enjoyed traveling for pleasure and visiting Southern cities. Through his travels to Mobile, Natchez, Charleston, Miami, Savannah and other coastal towns, Womack developed an interest in tropical flora. He brought back banana plants and coconuts to cultivate around his property.

Verbal Boundary Description (Describe the boundaries of the property.)

The National Register boundary is indicated with a heavy black line, drawn to scale, on the attached National Register map.

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

The boundaries include the residential lots developed beginning in the 1920s by John L. Womack on Ponce de Leon Court, plus the contiguous residential properties at 416, 420, and 430 East Ponce de Leon Avenue, which were developed at the same time as the Womack houses. Development outside these boundaries includes a school, a church, and commercial properties not directly associated with this small neighborhood, plus two nearby houses on East Ponce de Leon Avenue that would not contribute to the district due to extensive alterations.

I. NAME OF DISTRICT

Ponce de Leon Court is located entirely within Land Lot 246 of the 15th District of DeKalb County. The neighborhood was developed in approximately 1927 by Maggie H. Womack, and has thus often carried the name "M. H. Womack Property Subdivision." Ponce de Leon Court was originally known by the name "Palm Court".²

II. DESCRIPTION OF DISTRICT

A. Narrative Description

Ponce de Leon Court consists of 27 Craftsman Bungalow homes built in the mid 1920's, one medium-sized, but still period, apartment building, and with one large balconied home (now divided into 12 apartments) that looks as though it belongs in New Orleans or Charleston. It is also bordered on the north by the historic section of the Decatur cemetery. There are a fairly large number of trees on the street; near the large house at the end are six palm trees, two very large firs, and a stand of large bamboo near the cemetery. The palms in particular are a special feature of the street, and are suspected to be among the northernmost palms in North America.¹

B. Condition

Excellent	20%
Good	60%
Fair	15%
Poor	5%
Ruinous	-

C. Number of Properties

There are 29 properties in this district.

D. Intrusions and Non-historic Properties

Almost all of the homes in this district have the same character of the original 1920's subdivision. The sole exception to this is 408 Ponce de Leon Avenue, at the corner of Ponce and Commerce. This property is a period bungalow that with a large, incongruous section added to the back that has never been fully completed.

E. Boundaries of the District

The district is bounded on the south by Ponce de Leon Avenue, on the north by the Decatur Cemetery, on the East by Commerce Drive, and on the west by the Glenwood Elementary School.

F. Photographs

Photographs of all properties are attached on the accompanying disc, along with each property's address, lot, and owner.

G. Maps

Maps of the district are attached as addenda to this document, including both current and historical surveys of the property.

III. HISTORY

A. Summary of Historic Facts

1. J. L. Womack constructed the large house at 205 Ponce de Leon Court sometime between 1913 (when the Glenwood School was constructed) and 1927. It appears that he was the proprietor of the Womack Lime and Cement Company.
2. In 1927, Maggie H. Womack purchased all of the other lots on the street. It seems that most of the houses were constructed about this time.
3. In 1930, Mrs. Womack lost many of these properties to foreclosure.
4. In 1958, the original building at 205 Ponce de Leon Court was divided into 12 separate apartments.

B. Historical Narrative

205 Ponce de Leon Court is believed to have been the first building on the street. It was built by Mr. J. L. Womack sometime during or before the mid 1920's. He is purported to have chosen the location so that his children would not have to cross Ponce de Leon Avenue to walk to Glenwood Elementary (constructed in 1913, according to its cornerstone).

Although it is not entirely clear whether Maggie H. Womack was John's daughter, wife, or sister, it is certain that she purchased all 27 lots on the street in 1927, which coincides with the period when most of the smaller houses were built. In 1930, she lost many of these properties to foreclosure. One assumes that her fortunes turned as a result of the Great Depression.

In 1958, J. L. Womack's original property was renovated and divided into 12 separate apartments.³

IV. SIGNIFICANCE

Geography

This district is clearly delineated between Ponce de Leon Avenue and the Decatur cemetery. It often appears as a bit of a surprise to visitors who are often unaware of its existence near the center of Decatur.

Architecture

The homes found in this district are of remarkably similar style – yet each remains slightly distinct from its neighbors. They were all constructed during much the same period during the 1920's.

Other

The district's distinct collection of bamboo and palm trees, known to have been planted during the 1920's, give it a feel quite distinct from other Decatur neighborhoods. In addition, a survey of Decatur's historic resources performed by Dr. Darlene R. Roth in 1990 identified this area as one of a few in the city worthy of National Register designation.

Vanishing DeKalb

editors note:

VANISHING DEKALB is a regular feature of your Newsletter. If you know of a bit of history in danger of being buried by progress let us know. It need not be a great monument, perhaps one of the reminders of everyday life. We print good news, too! A home restored or an historic building recycled is news.

I lived in the white house at the very end of Ponce de Leon Court from June 1974 to December 1975. I was fascinated by the old house and by the palm trees lining the street.

I was charmed by the high ceilings, the unusual rooms and the front porches on each apartment. Because it backed up to the old Decatur cemetery, it was also very quiet. Old buildings charming as they are, also have problems. I'll never forget the swarm of bees in the bathroom. They had apparently overwintered in the walls and were looking for an exit when warm weather returned. It's an exciting way to start one's morning!

Being next to the cemetery was an interesting experience. Many people find cemeteries an eerie place at night. I found it surprising to see how many people seemed to enjoy the cemetery in the gloaming — that half light between day and night when shadows are longest.

The palm trees are an unusual feature of this street. As I recall from conversations with my landlady, her father-in-law, John L. Womack, Sr. was from Florida, and planted the trees to remind him of home. They are surprisingly hardy, having survived decades of freezing weather and periodic sub-zero weather.

I attempted to trace the history of the house through the city directories. I do not know when the house was built, but in 1931 it was a single family home occupied by Nicholas Cruger. In 1932 the house was vacant. By 1933 it had been converted either to apartments or to a rooming house. One of the occupants, and probable owner, was John L. Womack. According to city directories, he moved around some, but by 1944 Mr. Womack had returned to Ponce de Leon Court — this time at #157. By 1950 J. L. Womack was at #156 and J. Lamar Womack, Jr. was at #160. His estate still owns the property today.

Essay Contest For Students

An essay contest with the theme "Moments in DeKalb County History" will bring history students on the fourth, fifth and eighth grade levels throughout the county into an active role in the renovation campaign for the Old Courthouse.

They will write about what the phrase means to them or to citizens of the county. The first prize for each grade level will be a scholarship award of a $100 savings bond. Second and third prizes will be $50 and $25 bonds.

The contest is sponsored jointly by DHS and the School Board Offices. Rules for the competition have been distributed to all county schools. A panel of judges will include members of DHS and DeKalb College. April 1 is the deadline for essays to be submitted. For further information contact Peggy Thompson at 371-5745.

Perhaps the first public air-conditioning in DeKalb was the ingenious method of cooling the audience for the Agnes Scott College commencement exercises in 1949. The Atlantic Ice Company delivered three tons of ice to the site, set up with fans blowing air over them.

A bit of Florida still lives on a quiet Decatur dead-end street.

Georgia Board Approves Ponce de Leon Court for National Register District

The Ponce de Leon Court neighborhood was nominated last fall for listing on the National Register of Historic Places. At a hearing in June, the nomination was accepted and approved by the Georgia National Register Review Board. Several property owners attended the hearing, along with a former resident of Ponce Court who is 82 years old and grew up on the street.

The next step is to prepare the final nomination, which will be sent to the National Register staff in Washington, D.C. The property owners in the Ponce de Leon Court Local Historic District already enjoy protection from demolition but they can now take advantage of significant property tax relief programs and preservation income tax credits.

For more information on the National Register of Historic Places and preservation tax incentive programs, visit the Georgia Historic Preservation Division, www.gashpo.org.

Decatur City Commission Meetings Broadcast Schedule

The Decatur City Commission meets on the first and third Monday of each month at 7:30 p.m. in the City Commission Meeting Room, Decatur City Hall, 509 N. McDonough St. If you are unable to make the meeting but want to keep up with the action, tune in to Comcast Channel 25 at 7:30 p.m. for the live broadcast. The meetings are also re-broadcast on the Saturday following the Monday night live broadcast at 2 p.m. Agendas for the meetings are posted outside City Hall and online at www.decaturga.com.

Homeowner Nights Continue at City Hall

The Planning/Development Department will hold its next Homeowner Night at City Hall on Tuesday, Aug. 3, 6-8 p.m. Homeowner Nights give Decatur residents an opportunity to meet with the planning director, building code official, building inspector, building and zoning permit technician, and preservation planner to discuss projects they may be considering for their house.

Homeowners can find out what their zoning allows, what construction is required, what inspections will need to occur, and how the permitting process works. For residents who live in historic houses, it is an opportunity to find out about possible tax incentive programs and any local designation requirements.

The final 2010 Homeowner Nights will be Oct. 5 and Dec. 7. For questions or additional information, contact Nathan Soldat, Nathan.soldat@decaturga.com, or call 404-370-4104.

A Season of Giving Seeks Committee Members and Volunteers

A Season of Giving/Christmas Decatur provides holiday gifts for Decatur's low-income children and senior citizens through the help of individuals, families, neighborhood associations, clubs, places of worship, and businesses. Committee positions and volunteer opportunities for the 2010 program include:

- Interviewing parents/guardians to determine appropriate gifts (need a good knowledge of children's toys and clothing);
- Working with senior citizen organizations and interviewing senior citizens to determine appropriate gifts;
- Coordinating office work on week days (answering voicemail, calling potential donors, sending "wish lists" to donors, and updating client and donor lists); and
- Coordinating gift intake and distribution.

No matter what holiday you observe, this is a perfect way to celebrate the true meaning of the Season of Giving. For more information, contact Lee Ann Harvey, 678-553-6548, or aseasonofgiving@decaturga.com.
